Because of Grievance of Freight Trainmen Entire System from New York to Chicago May Be Tied Up-Men Are Voting.

(Special to The Evening World.)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 14. -A great strike is threatened on the entire system of the Pennsylvania Railway.

From one end of the line to the other union workmen have voted to strike within the past forty-eight hours.' Voting in the Pittsburg dis trict was concluded at midnight. Despatches received here to-day say that the trainmen voted quietly and fell in line with the workmen in every one of the other districts.

For three weeks there has been much dissatisfaction among the trainmen running between Altoona and Harrisburg, and when the officials of the railroad company refused to come to the terms demanded by the trainmen their grievances were taken up by all the trainmen in the road's

The original trouble began when the railroad officials decided to do away with extra firemen on the middle division. On account of the large amount of freight handled on that division and the steep grades, freight engines were supplied with an extra fireman, whose duty it was to assist the regular fireman.

When the extra fireman was dispensed with dissatisfaction arose. and a committee representing the employees called upon the railroad officials here and presented their grievances. The officials refused to to state the nature of the ceremony per employ the extra firemen, and their reasons satisfied the committee.

In response to orders from the Brotherhood, the committee representing the employees again called upon the railroad officials and made a demand for more pay for the front brakemen. They approved the course he had adopted.

"I sat in Mr. Jerome's office for quite a while, expecting to be questioned by Assistant District-Attorney Lord, but he failed to see me and I went away.

"On the night they took Mr. Duke away two men came up and said he was wanted. He thought then that some criminal proceeding had been brought against him and went away willingly, although the men showed no pipers. It wasn't for a long time afterward that I succeeded in finding out what had become of him.

White Hat May Be Clue.

The only real clue the police possess lies in a detail of the description. The mar were a white fedora hat which he pulled down over his eyes as he entered the room. Mrs. Steel and Miss Hoffman noticed that his hair was closely cropped, as though he had recently been released from prison. The records of Sing Sing have been examined for recently released conviols, but none has been run across answering the description of the thief. Of course, he may have left some other prison within a short time.

Precisely the same methods used by the Woerz thief were successful in the Shipman hold-up two weeks ago. One of the young women of the household opened the door early in the evening and admitted the thief, who pointed a revolver at her, demanding money. His face was hidden by a handkerchief and he wore a fedora hat. Mr. Shipman happened to step into the hallway at that moment, and was also threatened by the revolver. He tossed the thief as bill, which the man picked up from the floor. Then he stepped outside the Neither of them resembled in the slight-est particular the man who committed the robbery. This man was about 5 feet 8 or 9 inches tall, of slight build, dark complexion and smooth shaven. A man was arrested last Thursday at Springfield, Mass., for a hold-up similar to that of Mr. Woerz. Two of Mc-Clusky's sleuths went to Springfield with the maid, but she was unable to identify the prisoner.

Father had overheard everything, for I raised my voice, and the masked man raised his somewhat. When father quitted the parlor, and entered the hall, the revolver was turned from me and pointed at him. Father drew out a little roll of bills, about $100 in all. The man took it and turned to go downstairs. He kept his revolver pointed at us and left the house, without even shutting the door. I probably was as cool as any one. I was most afraid when the stranger turned from me to father, for he did it so fiercely I was afraid he would shoot without arranging about the money.
